Re: Your Employee Steve Maviglio Exposed As A Vandal

Mr. Sampson,

A video has surfaced that exposed one of your employees, Steve Maviglio, as a vandal. In the video, he is seen jumping on a neighbor's car and vindictively ripping off the windshield wiper. Whatever drove this vandalism, it's unbecoming for a spokesperson for the American Property Casualty Insurance Association. It's ironic that APCIA, an association of insurance companies dedicated to protecting property, including vehicles, would employ a person who vandalized another's car.

This is not the worst of Steve Maviglio's sins. As a public relations representative hired to tarnish our reputation, he is willing to cross all lines of propriety. For decades he has engaged in outright lies to try to damage our consumer group, Consumer Watchdog, which has represented California policyholders for nearly 40 years. This video shows who he is: an unhinged individual willing to do whatever it takes to get what he wants, including violate the law.

We may have substantive disagreements about insurance reform, but Maviglio operates in the gutter. We bring this video to your attention to shed a light on who is representing you to the public.

Sincerely,
